

Praise and Request

For those of you who have been following our saga of renewing our work permits, visas, and government paperwork: we have good news and bad news.

First the good news: the Pryor family's work permits and passports with visas attached have been processed and are now in hand. As of today, we have 85 days to get on the plane and head back to PNG. (But, who's counting??!!)

The bad news: Rebecca Linsenbigler's work permit has not processed yet. Which means that those 85 days are a short period of time indeed to get all of those things done in time.

Would you please give thanks for those that are done already, but join with us in prayer for the timely completion of Rebecca's work permit and visa. We are excited about her joining us there in PNG and don't want something like this to stand in her way.

Graduation..... Sort of.....

Karie has completed her final "full" semester of her graduate studies here at OSU. She had a 4.0 in all her classes. (I'm her husband and I'm allowed to

Packing and More Packing

Have you ever had to pack up all you own, and move somewhere? We have. In fact, we have done it several times, yet somehow practice does not make perfect. We are in the winding down stages of living in Stillwater, OK. We are not just making decisions on packing up or selling brag!) Since she would not be here to walk for graduation, she went ahead and completed the formalities on May 3. While it was great to see her in the “outfit” there is still some classes yet to complete. I believe were definitely more excited to see the ceremony than Mom and Dad! She still has 3 classes to compete in the summer school sessions. These are highly intensive, and overlap each other a little bit. Please pray for her to have clarity of mind while she takes on this last hurdle. If she is successful, she will have accomplished her goal to do a two years Masters Program in one year.

items we have been using. We also have some items that are going to be shipped in a container all the way to PNG! Some sawmill parts, building material and hardware, and even an ATV are a few the things getting shipped.

I (Jesse) have been over the last month or so, outfitting the ATV for dual purpose use. It will be used to haul sick patients, medical supplies, and construction tools. When there’s a snake bite victim, time is a priceless commodity. Being able to transport someone quickly to the clinic or to the airstrip for an evacuation is very important.

So far I have welded up an extra rack on it to make it more of a utility vehicle. The winch on the front is a great addition to pull it out of any mud holes it might get stuck in. All of these items should be in a container and on it’s way by the middle of June.
